Guardianship wishes for your minor children

If you have minor children, you should make your guardianship wishes known here and in your will. If you do not have a will, the court will appoint guardians for your minor children. Obviously, this is one of the most important decisions you will make in the estate protection process. Consider it carefully. Talk to the people you'd like to name as guardians and make sure they are willing and able to embrace the honor and the responsibility of caring for your children.
